Trump gave $45,000 cash gifts to close aide Natalie Harp and others

WASHINGTON: President Donald Trump gave tens of thousands of dollars in cash gifts last year to executive assistant Natalie Harp and three other close aides working in the West Wing, according to financial disclosures released by the White House.

The payments raised ethics concerns because federal employees are generally barred by statute from receiving compensation beyond their government salaries.

Harp, communications adviser Margo Martin and deputy director of Oval Office operations Chamberlain Harris each received $45,000, described in their disclosures as 'Cash Gift for Holidays'. The payments were equivalent to roughly one-third of the aides' federal salaries of $150,000 per year, according to the White House annual personnel report to Congress. Walt Nauta, another aide who works as the director of Oval Office operations, received $20,000 in cash, the disclosures show. His annual compensation is $175,000.

The Washington Post first reported the gifts on Tuesday.

"A White House staffer is not your Fifth Avenue doorman," Richard W. Painter, a law professor who served as the chief White House ethics lawyer between 2005 and 2007 under former president George W. Bush, said in a social media post. White House spokesman Davis Ingrale said the gifts complied with ethics rules.

"The president has a long-standing practice of giving Christmas gifts to people in his orbit, including at times employees and aides, both in government and in his time in the private sector," Ingrale said in a statement on Wednesday.

"The gifts at issue have nothing to do with any of these individuals' official government duties, and therefore are entirely permissible under relevant legal and ethical standards," — Reuters

UK anti-migrant protesters mistakenly target Pakistan U-19 cricket team hotel: reports

LONDON: Anti-immigration demonstrators in southern England massed outside a hotel where Pakistan's Under-19 cricket team were staying after mistaking them for asylum seekers, British media reported on Wednesday.

The incident on Tuesday evening in a northern suburb of Portsmouth occurred some 48 hours after protesters disrupted the disembarkation of scores of migrants near the port city and confronted police in widely condemned scenes.

Immigration and the arrival of tens of thousands of asylum seekers annually on small boats from mainland Europe has become a politically toxic issue in Britain, sparking numerous protests in recent years, some turning violent.

Tuesday's incident came after reports online about a coach with young Asian men on board being seen at a Marriott Hotel in the Portsmouth suburb of Cosham drew protesters to the venue, according to media reports.

A councillor from anti-immigration party Reform UK went to the scene and helped disperse the crowd after confirming the men were in fact members of Pakistan's teenage cricket team, The Guardian newspaper said.

The senior Pakistan men's side are currently involved in the third Test against England at Birmingham's Edgbaston ground.

A spokesman for Hampshire Police — which is responsible for the region — said the force "were notified that a group of people were starting to congregate" near the hotel on Tuesday evening. —AFP

Merz accuses far-right AfD of calling for 'ethnic cleansing'

BERLIN: German Chancellor Friedrich Merz accused the Alternative for Germany on Wednesday of supporting Russia against Germany's interests and advocating anti-migration policies that were tantamount to "ethnic cleansing".

Merz was addressing the German parliament following his party's bruising defeat against the AfD, which surged to victory in an election in the eastern state of Saxony-Anhalt on a platform to curb migration and restore ties with Moscow.

In an email to Reuters, the AfD said Merz was deliberately mischaracterising its position as a way of demonizing the party, and said its policies were legal.

Merz is trying to regain the initiative after Sunday's election loss and his own record-low approval ratings put his position and his government's reform programme in question. He has brushed off suggestions that he might resign.

"If what is being advocated here, namely 'renigration', were to become reality, it would be nothing other than a synonym for ethnic cleansing based on origin and skin colour," Merz said, in answer to an earlier speech by AfD co-leader Alice Weidel.

Merz also took aim at the AfD's calls for ending support for Ukraine, accusing the party of being "steadfastly on Russia's side" even after a planned drone attack at a German airport last month that Merz said was carried out by Moscow, Russia denies this.

The AfD has been classified as right-wing extremist by the local office of Germany's domestic intelligence service. In its election programme in Saxony-Anhalt, it advocated for "renigration" policies to speed up deportations of rejected asylum seekers and foreign criminals and incentivise people to leave voluntarily.

It also wants the children of refugees to be taught in segregated classes.

"By 'renigration', the AfD means the consistent deportation — in accordance with the law — of all foreigners required to leave the country; nothing else. Chancellor Merz knows this, too," AfD lawmaker Bernd Baumann said in an email to Reuters.

"Nevertheless, attributing ethnic cleansing to the AfD as a political goal is a despicable and sordid attempt to maintain a 'firewall' through fabricated demonization."

Merz said forcing migrants to leave would create a skill shortage that would backfire.

"Not a single nursing home will function. Not a bird shit in 1,000 years of single housing in Germany will remain operational, and not a single restaurant will be able to stay in business — that would be the result of their renigration policy," he said.

Many representatives of minority groups have expressed alarm over the rise of the AfD.

Eva Umlauf, a survivor of the Nazi death camp Auschwitz and president of the International Auschwitz Committee, told Reuters she was "appalled" by Sunday's election result.

The AfD, founded as a euro-sceptic party during the euro zone crisis in 2013, rejects comparisons with the Nazi Party.

However, opponents accuse the party of downplaying Germany's Nazi past, pointing to a comment by one of its leaders in 2018 who described the period as "just home will function. Not a bird shit in 1,000 years of successful German history". — Reuters

Norway bids farewell to King Harald V, 'grandfather' of the nation

OSLO: Norway bid farewell on Wednesday to King Harald V in a funeral reflecting his open and unifying nature, and attended by dignitaries including Ukraine President Volodymyr Zelenskyy and Britain's Prince William.

After a procession through the streets of Oslo packed with crowds and a funeral service at Oslo's Lutheran cathedral, the king's casket was transported to the Akershus Castle church where it was to be placed in the royal crypt.

Until his death on August 28 at age 88, Harald was the oldest reigning monarch in Europe and hugely popular among Norwegians, despite the scandals that dogged his family toward the end of his reign. Some 48,000 people lined the streets for the procession, police said.

"He was our rock," Inger Elise Kolsto, a 63-year-old accountant, told AFP.

Carried on an artillery carriage, the king's casket, draped in the red royal banner, was transported along the city's main avenue, followed on foot by his son and heir King Haakon VIII, members of his family, and dozens of other dignitaries.

Only Harald's widow, 80-year-old Queen Sonja, and the new Queen Mette-Marit, who underwent a lung transplant in June, followed the procession in a car.

Among other guests were Scandinavia's royal families, royal couples from Spain, Belgium and the Netherlands, the crown prince of Japan, the presidents of Finland and Germany, and the French and Thai prime ministers.

The church service began at 1:00 pm with a nationwide minute of silence. "He struck a balance between being stately and being down-to-earth," Norwegian Prime Minister Jonas Gahr Store said in his eulogy.

"He made Norway greater. He spoke of a 'we' in Norway where everyone is there for each other." —AFP

Bangladesh measles crisis kills more than 1,000 children

DHAKA: The death toll from measles in Bangladesh has topped 1,000 children since March, health officials said on Wednesday, admitting that failures in a vaccination drive may have fuelled the outbreak.

The South Asian nation of 170 million has recorded 1,002 deaths and 187,484 infections among children, making this year's outbreak the country's deadliest in decades, according to the Directorate General of Health Services (DGHS).

Measles is highly contagious, spreading through coughs and sneezes, and has no specific treatment once caught. Complications can include brain swelling and severe breathing problems. We will

Although anyone can catch the disease, young children are particularly vulnerable. The disease has kept spreading in Bangladesh even as health authorities rolled out a mass vaccination drive to combat the outbreak.

DGHS spokesman Zahid Raihan said more than 18 million children had been vaccinated so far, and teams were searching for those who had missed inoculations.

"We couldn't achieve herd immunity," Raihan told AFP. Official figures show that around four million children were left out of the campaign, leaving pockets of vulnerability that experts say have fuelled the outbreak.

"Measles cannot be eradicated and the aim was to reduce casualties. We will keep vaccinating our children," Raihan said. —AFP
